Quick Tips on Room Lighting

First, we want to go through a few quick tips that you should keep in mind as we walk you through lighting layouts. These include:

- How you physically feel in a room has a lot to do with the lighting in the room
- More light doesn't necessarily mean better lighting; quality is far more important than quantity
- Lower ambient lighting is great for most parts of the room; task lighting should only be used where it is needed
- In this manner, it is important to match the lighting level to the tasks that are being performed
- When choosing to light the room, it is important to think about the natural lighting that is already present

Now, it is time to go through the different types of lighting.

Types of Lighting in Your Home

Our experts will help you go through the various types of lighting and help you find the best options for your rooms. There are four large categories of lighting. They include:

- Ambient lighting is soft lighting that creates a glow in the room
- General lighting is typically overhead lighting
- Task or directional lighting is lighting that is aimed in a specific direction to make it easier for people to perform certain tasks, such as under cabinet lighting
- Accent lighting is used to add drama to a space and is usually decorative, such as chandelier installation

The first step in laying out lighting in a room is determining which types of lighting are needed for the room to be functional. Our experts will help you plan out the lighting in the room with a combination of the above lighting types. Then, we will get down in the details with you and help you match functional lighting options to your personal styles and preferences in New Jersey.
